The 1968 Rite of Episcopal Consecration:
Still Null and Still Void
 Replies to objections from Br. Ansgar Santogrossi, Fr. Pierre-Marie de Kergorlay and Fr. Alvaro Calderon

— Rev. Anthony Cekada —
www.traditionalmass.org

IN MARCH 2006, I published “Absolutely Null and Utterly Void,” a 14,000-word study that examined the validity of the new Rite of Episcopal Consecration promulgated in 1968 by Paul VI. As should be evident from the title of the article, I concluded that the new rite was invalid. A number of things led me to write the article: A considerable number of “approved” traditional Latin Masses are now offered under the auspices of dioceses or organizations such as Fraternity of St. Peter or the Institute of Christ the King, and the priests involved trace their ordinations to bishops consecrated in the new rite. If these bishops were not true bishops, the priests they ordained are not priests, and the faithful who assist at their Masses adore and receive only bread.

Moreover, since the election of Benedict XVI in the April 2005 conclave, the Society of St. Pius X (SSPX) has been negotiating with the Vatican for its reintegration into the Conciliar Church. Because many traditionalists doubt the validity of the post-Vatican II sacramental rites, and indeed because Benedict XVI had been consecrated a bishop in the new rite, the SSPX superiors invited Dominican cleric in their orbit, Fr. Pierre-Marie de Kergorlay OP, to produce an article demonstrating that the new rite of episcopal consecration was valid.

Fr. Pierre-Marie’s study first appeared in Fall 2005 in the traditionalist Dominicans’ quarterly Sel de la Terre. SSPX promptly had it translated and printed in the SSPX’s English-language publication, The Angelus, under the title of “Why the New Rite of Episcopal Consecration is Valid.”

My own article addressed Fr. Pierre-Marie’s main arguments. It was in turn translated into French and widely circulated in France, thanks to the efforts of Rore Sanctifica, a group of European traditionalists who have published a vast amount of documentation demonstrating the invalidity of the new rite.

I subsequently produced a two-page résumé intended for popular circulation (also translated and circulated in France) entitled “Why the New Bishops are Not True Bishops.” I also managed (somehow) to give two interviews about the subject on French radio, and I personally sent copies of the article to the French-speaking members of SSPX slated to participate in the July 2006 General Chapter.

Several critical responses to the article have appeared. However, as of this writing (December 2006), only three writers have raised substantive issues that I believe need to be addressed:

• Br. Ansgar Santogrossi OSB. Br. Ansgar, a Benedictine brother from Mount Angel Abbey in Oregon and a graduate of the Institut Catholique (Paris), teaches philosophy and theology at diocesan seminary of Cuernavaca, Mexico. His commentary first appeared in Objections, a French publication edited by the Rev. Guillaume de Tanoüarn, a former member of SSPX who now serves an Indult group in France. Another version subsequently appeared in the U.S. traditionalist publication The Remnant.

• Fr. Pierre-Marie. Fr. Pierre-Marie’s own response appeared in the form of a short “Note,” printed in Sel de la Terre. It was subsequently appended (together with two other brief “Notes”) to a reprint of his original article.

• Rev. Alvaro Calderon. Fr. Calderon teaches theology at the SSPX seminary in Argentina. His response

1. FATHER ANTHONY CEKADA teaches sacramental moral theology, canon law, and liturgy at Most Holy Trinity Seminary, Brooksville Florida. He was ordained in 1977 by Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, and has written numerous articles and studies putting forth the traditionalist case. He resides near Cincinnati, where he offers the traditional Latin Mass. 1. www.traditionalmass.org. Those who do not have Internet access can obtain a free copy of the article by contacting St. Gertrude the Great Church, 4900 Rialto Road, West Chester OH 45069, 513.643.4212.
3. www.rore-sanctifica.org. The group’s name is Latin for “sanctify with dew,” a phrase from the essential sacramental form for episcopal consecration prescribed by Pope Pius XII in 1947. Fr. Pierre-Marie’s article was written in response to the first dossier Rore had published on the invalidity of the new rite.
4. St. Gertrude the Great Newsletter, October 2006; see also www.traditionalmass.org.
7. 57 (Summer 2006).
also appeared in Sel de la Terre,9 and then in The Angelus.10

The debate over the validity of the new rite of episcopal consecration centers on its essential sacramental form — the words in a sacramental rite necessary and sufficient to produce the effect of the sacrament.

Before I turn to the objections of Br. Ansgar, Fr. Pierre-Marie and Fr. Calderon, I will outline some key points in my original argument.

I. Résumé of My Argument

A. Principles regarding Validity.

Unlike many other areas in theology, the principles moral theology applies to determine the validity of sacramental forms are very simple and very easy to understand. These are the ones that concern us here:

1. In each sacramental rite, there is an essential sacramental form that produces the sacramental effect. When a substantial change of meaning is introduced into the essential sacramental form through the corruption or omission of essential words, the sacrament becomes invalid (=does not “work,” or produce the sacramental effect).

2. Sacramental forms approved for use in the Eastern Rites of the Catholic Church are sometimes different in wording from the Latin Rite forms. Nevertheless, they are the same in substance, and are valid.

3. In 1947 Pius XII declared that the form for Holy Orders (i.e., for diaconate, priesthood and episcopacy) must univocally (=unambiguously) signify the sacramental effects — the power of Order and the grace of the Holy Ghost.

4. For conferring the episcopacy, Pius XII designated as the essential sacramental form a sentence in the traditional Rite of Episcopal Consecration that univocally expresses (a) the power of the Order that a bishop receives and (b) the grace of the Holy Ghost.

B. Application to the New Rite

In 1968 Paul VI replaced in their entirety both the consecratory Preface and the essential sacramental form designated by Pius XII. In the new Preface (now called a “Consecratory Prayer”) Paul VI designated the following words as the essential sacramental form,11 and hence required for validity:

“So now pour out upon this chosen one that power which is from you, the governing Spirit whom you gave to your beloved Son, Jesus Christ, the Spirit given by him to the holy apostles, who founded the Church in every place to be your temple for the unceasing glory and praise of your name.”

Now, in “Absolutely Null and Utterly Void,” I applied the principles from section A to the foregoing by posing and responding to five simple questions. Here I will mention the two that figure most directly in the responses from Br. Ansgar, Fr. Pierre-Marie and Fr. Calderon:

1. Eastern Rite? Was the new form employed in a Catholic Eastern Rite as a sacramental form for conferring the episcopacy?

I posed this question because throughout his article Fr. Pierre-Marie appealed repeatedly — I counted at least a dozen times — to Eastern Rite prayers as iron-clad proof for the validity of the Paul VI form.

And referring in particular to the Coptic and Maronite Rites, Fr. Pierre-Marie wrote: “The utilization of the form that is in use in two certainly valid Eastern rites assures its validity.”12

It was relatively simple to disprove this claim. All I had to do was consult works that identify the Eastern Rite sacramental forms (e.g., Cappello’s de Sacramentis and the first volume of Denzinger’s Ritus Orientalium), look up the texts the authors gave as the Coptic and Maronite forms for episcopal consecration, and compare these with the Paul VI form.

Here is what I discovered:

(a) Length. The Coptic and Maronite forms consist of long Prefaces (about 340 and 370 words respectively); unlike the Roman Rite, no one sentence in either is designated as the essential sacramental form.

The new Paul VI Consecratory Prayer is 212 words long in its entirety; the passage that Paul VI designated as the essential sacramental form is 42 words long.

So, merely comparing the length of these Eastern texts with the Paul VI text, demonstrated that even on the face of it, Fr. Pierre-Marie’s claim was false.

(b) Coptic Form. The Paul VI Consecratory Prayer contains many phrases found in the Coptic form. It omits, however, three phrases in the Coptic form that enumerate three specific sacramental powers considered proper to the order of bishop alone: “to provide clergy according to His commandment for the priesthood… to make new houses of prayer, and to consecrate altars.”13

This omission is significant, because the dispute over the validity of the essential sacramental form of Paul VI revolves around whether it adequately expresses the power of the Order being conferred — i.e., episcopacy.

(c) Maronite Form. The Paul VI Consecratory Prayer has nothing in common with the prayer Denzinger gives as the Maronite form for episcopal consecration. It has few phrases in common with a prayer that follows — but is not part of — the Maronite form. The Paul VI Consecratory Prayer does, however, closely resemble another Maronite prayer — one found in the Rite for the Consecration of a Maronite Patriarch. Indeed, Fr. Pierre-Marie reproduces much of this text to support arguments for the validity of the new rite.

However, this prayer is not a sacramental form for conferring the episcopacy. It is merely an installation prayer, because the Maronite Patriarch is already a bishop when he is appointed.

(d) Summary. Having disproved Fr. Pierre-Marie’s principal factual claim and the conclusion — “The utilization of the form is in use in two certainly valid Eastern rites assures its validity” — I then examined the new rite using other principles that moral theology applies to ascertain the validity of sacramental forms.

2. The Sacramental Effects. Does the new sacramental form univocally signify the sacramental effects — the power of Order (the episcopacy) and the grace of the Holy Ghost?

The two elements mentioned are those specified by Pius XII (see I.A.3, above), and the form must signify both.

Here, the discussion turns on the meaning of governing Spirit (Spiritus principalis in Latin, or its Greek equivalent, hegemonomicon pneuma) in the new essential sacramental form. What does it signify?

(a) The Holy Ghost? From the context, governing Spirit appears to mean, simply, the Holy Ghost. Spiritum is capitalized in the Latin original, indicating the Third Person of the Trinity, and the relative pronoun quem (here meaning “whom”) is used, rather than quam (which would refer to another antecedent in the form, virtus, i.e., power).

However, the grace of the Holy Ghost is only one of the required elements.

(b) The Power of Orders? To be valid, the essential form must also univocally (unambiguously) signify the power of Order (potestas Ordinis) — in this case, the episcopacy.

The only possible term in the form that might signify this is likewise governing Spirit. Does it univocally signify the power of Order conferred upon a bishop at his consecration?

- Latin and Greek dictionaries render the adjective governing as, respectively, “Originally existing, basic, primary... first in importance or esteem, chief... befitting leading men or princes,” and “of a leader, leading, governing” or “guiding.”
- There is a related noun, hegemonia, which in general means “authority, command,” and in a secondary sense means “rule, office of a superior; episcopal... of a superior of a convent... hence of sphere of bishop’s rule, diocese.”

But even in this sense, it does not connote the power of Order (potestas Ordinis, i.e. “sacramental” power) a bishop possesses, but merely jurisdiction (potestas jurisdictionis, i.e. “ruling” power), especially since one definition mentions a monastic superior.

- I undertook a brief survey of other sources, and uncovered a dozen possible meanings for governing Spirit: originally existing spirit, leading/guiding spirit, a perfect spirit like King David, generous or noble spirit, God the Father, God the Holy Ghost, an external divine effect, supernatural spirit of rectitude/self-control, good disposition, qualities possessed by a Coptic abbot (gentleness, love, patience, graciousness), virtues proper to a Coptic Metropolitan (divine knowledge received through the Church).
- The term governing Spirit, then, is not univocal, a term that signifies only one thing, as Pius XII required. Rather, it is ambiguous — capable of signifying many different things, qualities and persons.
- Among these meanings, moreover, we do not find the power of Order (potestas Ordinis). The expression governing Spirit does not even ambiguously connote the Sacrament of Holy Orders in any sense, still less in the sense of the fullness of the priesthood that constitutes the episcopal Order.

(c) Which Is it? So, although the sacramental form for conferring Holy Orders is supposed to signify two sacramental effects, governing Spirit signifies only one — from the context in the new rite, probably the Holy Ghost.

But governing Spirit does not even ambiguously signify the other effect, the power of Order.

If one were to argue that governing Spirit did signify this, however, then the other required element, the Holy Ghost, would be absent from the form.

---

14. H. Denzinger, Ritus Orientalium, Coptorum, Syrorum et Armenorum (Würzburg: Stahel 1863), hereafter “RO,” identifies the texts at RO 1:141. See See RO 2:23–24 for the texts themselves. It is divided into two sections. According to the rubric in the footnote, the consecrating bishop continues to hold his hand imposed during the part following the intercession of the Archdeacon.
15. RO 2:198. “Spiritum...Sanctum, illum principalem.” “expellat omnia ligamina.”
16. RO 2:220.
19. Lampe, 599.
In either case, the consequences are the same: the form does not signify one of the things it is supposed to signify.

(d) Conclusions. The foregoing analysis of governing Spirit led me to the following conclusions:

- Because one of the required elements is not present, the Paul VI form constituted a substantial change in the essential sacramental form for conferring the Order of the episcopacy.
- According to the general principles enunciated (I.a), a substantial change in an essential sacramental form renders a sacrament invalid.
- An episcopal consecration conferred with the essential sacramental form promulgated by Paul VI is invalid.

Thus my main arguments and conclusions. We now turn to the objections.

II. Br. Ansgar Santogrossi OSB

Brother Ansgar provides readers with a short summary of my arguments and says he will bring together “in a somewhat shotgun fashion a number of aspects of the issue which are neglected by Fr. Cekada.” After this, “Fr. Cekada’s fundamental error — and the validity of Paul VI’s episcopal ordination formula — will become evident.”

Br. Ansgar’s argument consists of two parts:

First, he attempts to neutralize the general principle (see I.A.3 above) that the essential form for conferring a Sacred Order must univocally express the power of the Order conferred.

Second, having reduced the standard for validity to what he calls “a field of implicit significations,” Br. Ansgar argues that governing Spirit in the new Rite of Episcopal Consecration “implicitly, but really and unequivocally signifies the episcopal power of ordination.”

A. Pius XII’s “Ambiguous” Formulas

Br. Ansgar sets out to demonstrate that the essential sacramental forms prescribed in Sacramentum Ordinis by Pius XII — yes, Pius XII — were ambiguous and thus invalid by the standard I applied to the Paul VI form.

1. Trent. For openers, Br. Ansgar attempts to enlist the Council of Trent in support of episcopacy as governing Spirit — Spiritus principalis in Latin,

   “The first thing the Council of Trent teaches about bishops (Decree on the Sacrament of Order, chapter 4),” says Br. Ansgar, “is that they are principally members of the hierarchy, established by the Holy Spirit to rule the Church.”

   From this, one would naturally expect to turn to the Decree and find the Latin word principalis, as in Spiritus principalis.

   But no, Br. Ansgar has used an English translation; where his translation says “principally,” the Latin original uses the term praecipue — similar in some of its meanings to principalis, but not the term we are arguing about.

   Nor is “the first thing” that the Decree teaches about bishops that they are “established by the Holy Spirit to rule.” The Decree begins by teaching in Chapter I that they are successors to the Apostles in the priesthood with the power to confer sacraments.

2. Diaconate. The word “ministry,” Br. Ansgar argues, is used in the Pius XII forms for both diaconate and episcopacy. How, Br. Ansgar asks, does Fr. Cekada know that the formula for episcopal consecration “makes a bishop and not an archdeacon”?

   Well, Fr. Cekada knows it because Rev. Francis Hürth SJ, one of the theologians who wrote Sacramentum Ordinis for Pius XII, explained exactly what the word “ministry” meant in the form for diaconal ordination:

   “No one can doubt that the word ‘ministry’ in this sentence is used in the full and technical sense corresponding to the Greek term diaconia (‘diaconii’), from which this whole Order derives its name ‘diaconate’.”

3. Priesthood. Turning to the traditional formula for priestly ordination, Br. Ansgar argues: “The Greek word ‘presbyter’, found in its derivative presbyteratus in the essential form of ordination, signifies ‘elder’ and not ‘one who sacrifices’ (sacerdos).” This, too, according to Fr. Cekada’s standards, would be ambiguous.

   There are two problems with this:

   (a) The Greek word origins are irrelevant. The sacramental form is in ecclesiastical Latin, where the term presbyter refers exclusively to one who possesses the sacerdotal order below that of a bishop.

   (b) And in any case, Br. Ansgar has overlooked another expression in the Pius XII form — one that Fr. Hürth says univocally (unambiguously) expresses the order received:

   “By these words the power of the Order of the priesthood is univocally [univoce] expressed, together with the corresponding grace of the Holy Ghost. For what is being conferred by name is the sacerdotal dig-

---

21. The theory being, presumably: “If we build it, they will come…”
24. E.g., in a manner special to the particular case, peculiarly, more than any other instance, to a greater degree than others.
25. De Sacramento Ordinis 1, DZ 595: “atque apostolis eorumque successoribus in sacerdotio poletatem traditam consecrandi, offerendi et ministrandi corpus et sanguinem eius, necon et peccata dimittendi et reiominendi.”
nity, the ‘office of the second rank’ (as opposed to the office of the first rank, which is the episcopacy).”

4. Episcopacy. And finally, applying the same method to the form that Pius XII prescribed for episcopal consecration, Br. Ansgar claims: “But still, ‘fullness of your ministry’ does not in itself indicate that this ministerial fullness is specifically different from the non-priestly ministry the ordained had once received when he was ordained a deacon.”

And Fr. Hürth provides an explanation of these terms from the theologians who proposed as the essential form the passage that Pius XII finally adopted:

“The words which fully suffice for the power and the grace to be signified are found in the consecratory Preface, whose essential words are those in which the ‘fullness or totality’ of the sacerdotal ministry and the ‘riment of all glory’ are expressed.”

So, unless you follow the tenets of the weird modern theory in which an author has no “privileged” insights into what his own writings mean, Fr. Hürth’s explanations of how and why the terms in the Pius XII forms are univocal will suffice to defeat Br. Ansgar’s “field of implicit significations” theory, which holds in effect that they are not.

B. “Implicit, Unequivocal Significations”

In the second section of his article, Br. Ansgar attempts to demonstrate that governing Spirit in the new Rite of Episcopal Consecration “implicitly, but really and unequivocally signifies the episcopal power of order.”

Here are some of the proofs that Br. Ansgar offers for the foregoing:

- Whoever received “a spiritual and Holy Spirit-derived character of the first order, or the character which is principalis, becomes the principal source of the Spirit in the Church. In other words, he is episkopos.”
- The term governing Spirit is sufficient because it is “proper to the episcopate.”
- There should be “no grounds for doubt about validity when a prelate manifestly intends ‘to ordain a bishop’ — he is using a book which says ‘ordination of a bishop’ about the rite — utilizes the expressions [...] Spiritum principalem.”
- Spiritus principalis is sufficient because “the episcopal power of sanctification does not need to be signified separately” because it is “principal.”
- “The bishop is the primary analogate of the signification in the usage of Spiritum principalem,” since all other duties in the Church “are under the oversight of the bishop.”

In response:

(1) If you carefully re-read the foregoing, you will notice that Br. Ansgar has done nothing more than re-state the same circular argument in several different ways: governing Spirit/Spiritus principalis sufficiently signifies the episcopacy because it sufficiently signifies the episcopacy.

(2) Specifically, Br. Ansgar cites no authority for the notion that a sacramental form that signifies “implicitly” is sufficient to confer a sacrament validly.

Indeed, traditional sacramental theology teaches the opposite. If someone who administers baptism says “I baptize you in the name of God,” his words imply the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, but the form is considered invalid.

(3) Br. Ansgar’s arguments are a classic example of post-Vatican II modernist “theologizing.” He does not define terms or clearly state his principles, and his language is fuzzy and elusive.

His claim that governing Spirit unequivocally and implicitly signifies the power of Order conferred upon a bishop is easily disproved, however, merely by defining his terms for him.

(a) “Univocal” means “that which has but one meaning.” In my original article, I demonstrated that the expression governing Spirit did not have just one meaning, but at least a dozen. It cannot therefore be called “unequivocal.”

(b) “Implicit” means “all that which is contained in something else,” so, if Br. Ansgar’s claim were true, one would find something like “the power of Order of the episcopacy” among the meanings for governing Spirit. But as I also demonstrated in “Absolutely Null,” this was not contained among these meanings, so neither can it be called “implicit.”

(4) Dogmatic theology, moral theology and canon law consider the power of Order (to confer sacraments) and the power of jurisdiction (to rule) to be separate and distinct. One is not automatically accompanied by, nor does it imply, the other.

Br. Ansgar’s arguments obliterate this distinction by implying that the sacramental power a bishop receives is somehow contained in “ruling” power.

It should therefore be evident that Br. Ansgar has been unable to offer a defense of governing Spirit that is based on any discernible principles of traditional Catholic theology.

29. Refutation, 12.
32. They are all found in “Refutation,” 12.
33. Lewis & Short, univocus.
34. A. Michel, “Explicite et Implicite,” DTC 5:1868. “Est explicite tout ce qui est admis ou proposé expressément; est implicite tout ce qui est contenu dans autre chose.”
III. Fr. Pierre-Marie OP

Fr. Pierre-Marie’s objections to “Absolutely Null” cover two short pages. With one exception, these do not address the substance of my argument against the validity of the new rite. I will begin by replying to his less important objections.

A. Peripheral Objections

1. Textual Dispute. Fr. Pierre-Marie claims I misrepresented Dom Emmanuel Lanne’s critique of a text that Fr. Pierre-Marie had relied upon. Rather than argue over this (the quote appeared in an appendix) I simply point out that in the same sentence I cited another scholar who also warned that the text in question “should be treated with caution.”

2. The Power to Ordain. Fr. Pierre-Marie leaves the impression that I contend that the form for episcopal consecration must explicitly mention the power to ordain priests for it to be valid.

3. Found Churches = Ordain? Fr. Pierre-Marie claims that the phrase in the Paul VI form that mentions the “power given to the Apostles to establish churches… necessarily implies that of ordaining priests.”

False, for at least two reasons:

(a) The Apostles founded churches only because they enjoyed an extraordinary jurisdiction to do so. The theologian Dorsch says specifically that this power is not communicated to bishops: “not all those functions proper to the apostles are also proper to bishops — for example, to establish new churches.”

(b) To establish “churches” (dioeceses, in modern terminology) is an exercise of the power of jurisdiction, not one of orders, such as ordaining priests. This jurisdictional power is proper to the Roman Pontiff alone.

4. Number of Words. Fr. Pierre-Marie also implies that I regarded the number of words in a sacramental form as some sort of indicator of validity.

False. I compared the word counts for the Eastern Rite forms with the Paul VI form because Fr. Pierre-Marie had claimed the latter is “in use in two certainly valid Eastern Rites.” How could his claim be true if not even the number of words is the same?

5. Unfair to Dom Botte? Fr. Pierre-Marie maintains that I did not fairly represent a statement by Dom Bernard Botte (author of the new Consecratory Prayer for Episcopal Consecration) that one could omit governing Spirit without affecting the validity of the new rite.

False. The issue under discussion at that point in my article was what governing Spirit meant in the essential sacramental form. That Dom Botte dismissed its significance in 1969 (before there was a dispute over it) proves that his later defense and “explanation” of it in 1974 (after there was a dispute over it) was a cynical pack of lies.

6. Indejectibility of the Church. Fr. Pierre-Marie maintains that I ignore this question.

False. I deal with it in section X.B of the article.

7. Ottaviani’s Approval. Fr. Pierre-Marie says I have “avoided” the question of Alfredo Cardinal Ottaviani supposedly approving the Paul VI form.

Well, it never occurred to me, because by 1968 Cardinal Ottaviani had let a lot of things slide by. But since Fr. Pierre-Marie thinks this is important: Ottaviani was blind at the time, his secretary was suspected of having misrepresented the contents of at least one document that the cardinal signed, and in any case, Ottaviani later went on Italian television to praise the liturgical reforms, which approval (I presume) Fr. Pierre-Marie would repudiate.

B. The Consecration of the Maronite Patriarch.

Fr. Pierre-Marie attempts to refute only one substantive point in my argument. In his original article, he had adduced the prayer for the Consecration of the Maronite Patriarch as evidence for the validity of the new rite. I had pointed out that this was merely an investiture prayer, not a sacramental prayer for consecrating a bishop.

Responding to this, Fr. Pierre-Marie refers readers to an earlier “Note” with the following comment: “Father Cekada asserts without proof the non-sacramentality of the Prayer of Ordination of the Maronite Patriarch. In our previous ‘Note,’ we have explained our position on this point.”

---

35. The text being the Latin translation in RO for the Coptic Rite of Episcopal Consecration.
37. Sont-ils êveques? 75. “En effet il est affirmé que le pouvoir reçu est celui du souverain sacerdoc, qu’il est le pouvoir donné aux Apôtres pour fonder les églises (ce qui implique nécessairement celui d’ordonner des prêtres), etc.
39. A. Dorsch, De Ecclesia Christi (Innsbruck: Rauch, 1928), 290. “Non omnes ii actus conventiun episcopis, qui apostolis, e.g., fundare novas ecclesias etc.”
40. See Canon 215.1. “Unius supremae ecclesiasticae potestatis est... dioeces... ergore.”
42. It according to the standards laid down by Pius XII, the new rite is invalid, the conclusion to be drawn is not that the Church has defected but rather that Paul VI somehow defected from the faith and lost his authority. While faith tells us it is impossible for the Church to defect, dogmatic theology, canon law and at least two papal pronouncements (Innocent III and Paul IV) tell us it is indeed possible for a pope to defect from the faith and lose his authority. For the quotations, see A. Cekada, Traditionalists, Infallibility and the Pope (West Chester OH: 1995-2006).
43. His secretary, Mgr. Gilberto Agustoni, was a liturgical modernist and a collaborator of Bugnini. For an account, see A. Cekada, “Background to the Intervention,” The Ottaviani Intervention, (Rockford IL: TAN 1992), 9-10
44. Sont-ils êveques? 75.
The attentive reader will pause to note the hidden assumption here: Though Fr. Pierre-Marie has put forward the prayer of the Consecration of the Maronite Patriarch as Exhibit A for the validity of the new rite, he is not obliged to prove it is indeed a sacramental prayer for conferring episcopal consecration. Rather, Fr. Cekada and others are obliged to prove it is not a sacramental prayer.

In any event, we turn to the prior Note, where Fr. Pierre-Marie argues his position as follows:45

- Choosing a Patriarch from among clerics who were already bishops is “relatively recent,” because “it was held that one should avoid moving a bishop from a see, even to create a patriarch.” Before that, a cleric of the patriarchal city who was not a bishop was chosen.
- A special ceremony was created “to consecrate the Patriarch … as the bishop of his patriarchal city and to institute him into his office.” Later, when only clergy who were already bishops were chosen to be patriarchs, “the ceremony was lost, or it at least lost its consecratory power.”
- The prayer for the Consecration of a Maronite Patriarch is “practically the same” as the one for consecrating a bishop. The principal difference lies in the consecratory prayer. In the case of the Patriarch, the ordinary prayer for episcopal consecration is replaced with “the prayer of Clement.”
- This prayer “today no longer has consecratory power when recited over a candidate who is already a bishop.” But the prayer “formerly possessed [this power], when it was recited over a candidate who was not a bishop.”

At first this argument may sound plausible. But it collapses instantly when you examine the details.

1. Vague Speculations. Each factual link in the foregoing argument is no more than a wooly generalization. Fr. Pierre-Marie does not (and indeed, probably could not) furnish us with specific information about his factual claims — the timeline, the identity of the clerics involved, which texts “lost their consecratory power,” who determined that this occurred, where one finds evidence that a “ceremony was lost,” etc.

2. No Citations. Fr. Pierre-Marie cites no sources whatsoever — theologians, historians, liturgists, etc. — to support these broad and sweeping claims. We may therefore assume that he makes them on no authority but his own, and therefore dismiss them as gratuitous.

3. Problems with Manuscripts. It is highly unlikely in any case that Fr. Pierre-Marie could ever identify with certitude the exact text that he maintains “lost its consecratory power.” An expert on the history of the Maronite Pontifical pointed out:

“Unfortunately, we lack documents that could provide information about the Maronite Pontifical in more ancient times. Only in the 13th century do we begin to find some that are reliable and authentic.”46

Subsequent sources are dated 1296, 1311, 1495, and 1683 (a reconstruction), and their history and interrelationship is extremely complex.

4. Contrary Testimony. The testimony of Irma Al-Amchiti, the 13th-century Maronite Patriarch associated with the first known edition of the Maronite Pontifical (1215), moreover, seems to demolish Fr. Pierre-Marie’s claim that the practice of choosing a Patriarch from among clerics who were already bishops is “relatively recent.”

The Patriarch wrote in his own hand that he had been consecrated a bishop and served as a metropolitan for four years before he became Patriarch in 1209.47 Or are we to understand that 1209 is still “relatively recent”?

5. Syrian Rite. The Syrian Rite, which is related to the Maronite Rite and stems from the same source, also employs the Prayer of Clement that Fr. Pierre-Marie mentions. But once again, the prayer is not used to consecrate bishops but exclusively for the installation of the Patriarch.

The original language (Syriac) even uses two separate terms to distinguish the sacramental rite for the consecration of a bishop from the non-sacramental rite for the consecration of a patriarch. The first rite is called an “imposition of hands,” while the second is referred to with a term meaning “to confide or invest someone with a duty.”48

A Syrian liturgist explains: “In the first case [episcopal consecration], the ordinand receives a charism different from the one he already possesses… In the second, the Patriarch does not receive a charism different from the one he received at the time he was made a bishop.”49

6. A Self-Extinguishing Argument. In the last point of his argument, Fr. Pierre-Marie implies that the same Maronite text can serve two purposes today — either as a non-sacramental prayer in the Maronite Rite to install a bishop as a Patriarch, or as a sacramental prayer in the Latin Rite to consecrate a priest as a bishop.

47. Quoted in Merhej. “Mar Boutros, patriarcha de Maronites… m’ordonné de mes mains sacrées et m’a érigé Métropolite.… Les quatre années passées… ils ont fait un tirage au sort où j’ai été choisi.”
48. G. Khouris-Sarkis, “Le Sacre des Évêques dans l’Église Syrienne: Introduction,” L’Orient Syrien 8 (1963), 140-1, 156-7. “Mais le pontificale… fait une distinction entre la consécration conférée aux évêques et celle qui est conférée au patriarche… et c’est pour cela que le pontificale appelle cette consécration ‘syom’ido d’Episkopi,’ imposition des mains aux évêques. The word used in the title of the ceremony for the patriarch, ‘Metten/ronhûnû,’ is the action of conferring a charge to someone, of the latter investiture.”
49. Khouris-Sarkis, 140-1. “Dans la première, j’eux reçu un charisme dif- ferent de celui qu’jposédait déjà… Dans le second, le patriarche reçoit un charisme différent de celui qu’il a reçu au moment où il a été créé évêque.”
It did not perhaps occur to Fr. Pierre-Marie that such a prayer can not be considered univocal (unambiguous); as a sacramental form for conferring Holy Orders, it must therefore be considered invalid. (See above: I.A.3, 4)

In sum, Fr. Pierre-Marie has presented no evidence to demonstrate that the Maronite prayer for the consecration of a patriarch was sacramental. He cannot therefore appeal to it as proof for the validity of the new rite of episcopal consecration.

IV. Fr. Alvaro Calderon SSPX

In his original article, Fr. Pierre-Marie had adduced another Eastern Rite text, the Coptic Rite Preface for Episcopal Consecration, as proof for the validity of the post-Vatican II rite. In “Absolutely Null,” I pointed out that the sentence that Paul VI had designated as the essential sacramental form was not identical to the actual Coptic form. Fr. Calderon’s objections to my article address this issue in particular.

A. Coptic Form vs. Paul VI Form.

1. A Fallacious Comparison? Fr. Calderon maintains that my comparison between the entire Coptic Preface and what he calls the “formal-effective” sentence in the Paul VI rite is fallacious and unfair.

For a comparison to be fair, he says, it would be necessary either to (a) identify the “formal-effective” sentence in the Coptic Preface and compare it with the “formal-effective” sentence designated by Paul VI, or (b) compare the whole Coptic Preface with the whole Paul VI Consecratory Prayer that surrounds the “formal-effective” sentence. 50

In response:

• As regards the Coptic Rite: The Coptic Synod of 1898 identified the form for episcopal consecration:

“The form is the actual prayer which the ordaining bishop recites while imposing hands on the ordinand,” 51 and Pope Leo XIII approved the acts of the Synod. 52

One need hardly look beyond what Leo XIII approved for a “formal-effective” sentence.

• As regards the new rite: Paul VI himself identified the “formal-effective” words which “pertain to the essence of the rite.” 53

Because such words must necessarily contain everything required — by definition they are both necessary and sufficient — here, too, there is no need to look at the whole Paul VI Consecratory Prayer before making a comparison. 54

2. An Omitted Statistic? Fr. Calderon says I do not point out that the majority of the 340 words in the Coptic preface occur in the rest of the new Consecratory Prayer. 55

Fr. Calderon is simply mistaken. I stated explicitly that, “the Paul VI Preface surrounding the new form contains many phrases found in the Coptic form.” 56

3. An Admission and Error. Fr. Calderon makes the following claim: “The likely ‘formal-effective’ phrase of the Coptic rite (which corresponds to the phrase considered to be such in the new rite) is shorter than that of the new rite; and consequently, is equally, if not more, ambiguous.” 57

Later in the article, Fr. Calderon asserts that the “formal words of the prefaces are, in general, rather ambiguous and general, even in the traditional Roman rite,” and that the “Romans” were “aware of the ambiguity of the formulas.” 58

Two things are startling about these statements:

• Fr. Calderon explicitly states that the new essential sacramental form is “ambiguous.” This conceals that the new form is not univocal — unambiguous — as Pius XII required.

• But by so doing, Fr. Calderon thus has posited the theological equivalent of a square circle. No sacramental form, by definition, can be “ambiguous,” because then it would not signify.

B. Context of the New Form

Fr. Calderon would have us look to the context of the new form for assurance of its validity. He says: “This context is very ample because it cannot be reduced to the Preface alone; the complete rite must be taken into consideration.”

From a quote by Leo XIII that speaks of the removal of all idea of consecration and sacrifice from Anglican ordination rites, Fr. Calderon extrapolates the following principle: if in the rest of the rite “consecration and sacrifice were involved,” the rite would have “consistency.” 59

In response:

• Fr. Calderon cites no authorities to support his principle about “involvement” producing “consistency” — whatever those nebulous terms may mean.

51. Quoted F. Cappello, De Sacramentis (Rome: Marietti 1951) 4732. “In collatione trium ordinum majorum… forma est ipsa oratio quam ordinans recitat, dum manus ordinandi imponit.”
54. The rubrics of the new rite, moreover, prescribe that bishops who “co-consecrate” — and thus in theory likewise confer the sacrament — merely recite the essential formula, rather the whole Consecratory Prayer. See Paul VI, De Ordinatione Episcopi, Presbyterorum et Diaconorum, ed. typ. alt. (Rome: Polyglot 1960), nos. 16, 25.
Fr. Calderon, however, has not even gotten to the point where he could make an argument from context. He has not demonstrated that the new form — even equivocally — contains both elements that Pius XII required in the sacramental form for Holy Orders: the power of the Order and the grace of the Holy Ghost.

The inability of Fr. Pierre-Marie and Fr. Calderon to establish that the new form “is in use in two certainly valid Eastern rites” leads us straight back to the term governing Spirit (Spiritus principalis). What does it really mean?

Br. Ansgar was unable to frame an answer that was based on any recognizable principle of traditional Catholic theology. Fr. Pierre-Marie and Fr. Calderon did not even attempt to do so.

But the answer to the question, as I demonstrated in “Absolutely Null,” is that governing Spirit really has no exact meaning. It can mean one of at least a dozen different things.

Among these is the Holy Ghost, and this is probably what it means in the context of the new form. Indeed, before the controversy over it arose, the principal author of the new rite, Dom Botte, simply referred to the passage containing governing Spirit as “the invocation of the Holy Ghost.”

But among the many meanings for the expression, we do not find the power of Order (potestas Ordinis). The governing Spirit does not even ambiguously connote the Sacrament of Holy Orders in any sense, still less in the sense of the fullness of the priesthood that constitutes the episcopal Order.

Without this, the essential sacramental form in the rite of Paul VI is invalid on the face of it because one of the two necessary elements prescribed by Pius XII is missing. “Context,” no matter how “ample,” cannot “specify” a term that is not present at all.

To sum up the problem once again: The debate over the validity of the new rite of episcopal consecration centers on its essential sacramental form — the words in a sacramental rite necessary and sufficient to produce the effect of the sacrament.

In the new rite of episcopal consecration, this form does not univocally express the power of Order. According to the general principles of sacramental moral theology, it thus lacks one of the essential elements required in a form for Holy Orders, and is therefore invalid — cannot confer the episcopacy.

Accordingly, bishops consecrated with this new rite lack the sacramental powers of true bishops, priests ordained by such bishops lack the sacramental powers of true priests, the sacraments they confer which depend upon the sacerdotal character are invalid, and the faithful who assist at their Masses adore and receive only bread.

Only…bread…

---

Bibliography

——. Ritus Orientalium. Wurzburg: 1863–4 (“RO”)

Dictionnaire de Théologie Catholique. Paris: Letouzey 1913. (“DTC”)

PIUS XII. Constitution Sacramentum Ordinis, 30 November 1947. DZ 2301.

---

---

January 9, 2007
ARTICLES & STUDIES by FATHER CEKADA

CANON LAW

Canon Law and Common Sense. Refutes charges that traditional Catholics are “outlaws.” Also demonstrates that too-literal application of the Code (a la “Home-Aloners”) would eliminate every sacrament but baptism in danger of death. (Sacerdotium 7, Spring 1993)

Is Rejecting the Pius XII Liturgical Reforms “Illegal”? Why the general principles of church law allow us to reject pre-Vatican II liturgical changes that were the work of Annibale Bugnini, the modernist who went on to create the Novus Ordo. (Internet, 27 April 2006)

Russia and the Leonine Prayers. The Prayers after Low Mass and Fatima. Origins and purpose of the prayers. Is the St. Michael Prayer connected to a vision? Did the Church’s enemies suppress a “prophetic” version of it? Church law and the obligation to say the Leonine Prayers. Substitution of other prayers. (Sacerdotium 5, Autumn 1992)

FEENEYISM

Baptism of Desire and Theological Principles. The main problem with the Feeneyite position: A rejection of the universal ordinary magisterium and of the fundamental principles by which issues in Catholic theology must be decided. With chart analyzing the teaching of 25 theologians on baptism of desire and baptism of blood. (Conference notes: July 2000)

Was Fr. Feeney’s Excommunication Doubtful? (Sacerdotium 14, Spring 1995)

NEW MASS

Did Paul VI ‘illegally Promulgate’ the Novus Ordo? The Remnant, SSPX and countless traditionalist groups have claimed that Paul VI didn’t follow the correct legal procedures for abolishing the old Mass and promulgating the New Mass. Fr. Cekada explodes this myth and lays out the consequences. (SGG Newsletter 49, February 2000).

The Ottaviani Intervention: Its Enduring Value. Scholarly history and analysis of the “Short Critical Examination of the Novus Ordo Missae” that Cardinal Ottaviani submitted to Paul VI. Preface to Fr. Cekada’s 1992 re-translation. (Sacerdotium 14, Spring 1995)

Welcome to the Traditional Latin Mass. Traditional vs. new Mass. A complete overview of all the issues. Absolutely the best available introduction for newcomers. (Booklet. Revised 2006.)

PASTORALIA

Fighting Scrupulosity. Short resume of the rules for combating this difficult affliction. (Pamphlet, 1985.)

Natural Family Planning: On Recent Condemnations of NFP. A priest and seminary professor answers the lay “experts” who condemn NFP as sinful. Resume of general principles, requisite conditions and gravity of obligations. (Pamphlet, Sept. 1998)

Sunday Obligation: How to Reassure Newcomers. (Sacerdotium 14, Spring 1995)

Why Do Good Priests Leave Bad Impressions? Don’t drive newcomers away from the traditional Mass. (Sacerdotium 11, Spring 1994).

SACRAMENTS

Traditional Priests, Legitimate Sacraments. Divine law obliges traditionalist priests to confer sacraments, and renders their apostolate legitimate. Human ecclesiastical laws that would otherwise forbid this have ceased due to the apostasy of the post-Vatican II hierarchy. (Monograph, July 2003)

Why the New Bishops are Not True Bishops. In March 2006 Fr. Cekada published “Absolutely Null and Utterly Void,” a lengthy study demonstrating that the 1968 Novus Ordo Rite of Episcopal Consecration is invalid. This article is a two-page resumé of the original study. Photocopy and distribute! (SGG Newsletter, October 2006)

SEDEVACANTISM

The Bellarmine Resistance Quote: Another Traditionalist Myth. Analysis of a passage in St. Robert Bellarmine on ‘resisting’ the pope that traditionalists have misinterpreted for decades. (St. Gertrude the Great Newsletter, October 2004.)

Benedict XVI’s Ecumenical One-World Church. What are we to make of Ratzinger? Preliminary considerations about his record, his teachings and the consequences. (Sermon, Cincinnati, 24 April 2005)

Did Bellarmine Condemn Sedevacantism? How SSPX, The Remnant, others, use a quote out of context. (Sacerdotium 12, Summer 1994)

Frankenchurch: A Letter to the Editor. Despite what Christopher Ferrara, SSPX, etc. claim, if you believe Paul VI was a true pope, Vatican II is obligatory. And you can’t use Vincent of Lerins to turn the magisterium into the doctrinal equivalent of Country Buffet. (Internet, Jan 2006)

Have I Rejected the Pope? Letter to The Remnant briefly explaining the pope issue. (Letter, May 1992)

Is Sedevacantism ‘Pope-Sitting’? Systematic refutation of an SSPX apologist’s critique of sedevacantism. (Sacerdotium 16, Spring 1996)

An Objection to Sedevacantism: Paul VI as ‘Patriarch of the West.’ Refutation of an SSPX apologist’s critique of sedevacantism. (Sacerdotium 16, Spring 1996)

Resisting the Pope, Sedevacantism and Frankenchurch. A short case for sedevacantism. Can one recognize and then ‘resist’ a true pope? The nature of heresy. Ratzinger’s ‘Frankenchurch’ heresy that denies an article of the Creed: I believe in one Church. (Remnant November 2005)

Sedevacantism and Mr. Ferrara’s Cardboard Pope. Systematic refutation of a widely-circulated attack against sedevacantism. Among topics discussed: ‘absurdity’, dead church, long vacancy of Apostolic See, perpetual successors, judging the First See, manifest heresy, doctrines denied, heretical actions, the pope on trial, presumptions of guilt, John XXII and Honorius cases, right-to-resist-the-pope quotes, Paul IV’s Bull on a heretical pope. (Internet, August 2005)

Sedevacantism: How to Tell Aunt Helen. Letter to a priest about a pastoral approach to the pope issue. (Sacerdotium 15, Autumn 1995)

Traditionalists, Infallibility and the Pope. How can we reconcile the evil of the New Mass and the errors of Vatican II with infallibility and the duty of obedience Catholics owe to the Successor of St. Peter? A clear and concise work, written for newcomers to the traditional movement, that explains why rejecting Vatican II, the New Mass, and the doctrinal errors of Paul VI and his successors is not “disobedience to the Pope.” Quotes from theologians on the possibility of a heretical pope. New edition includes material on Benedict XVI and offers responses to common objections against sedevacantism. Approx. 25,000 copies distributed world wide. The argument for sedevacantism that SSPX never dared to answer! (Booklet 1995, 2006)

SOCIETY OF ST. PIUS X

Bp. Williamson’s Montevacantist Error. Ratzinger a heretic? “No,” says Bp. Williamson of SSPX, “he just has a sick mind...” However: (1) The “sickness” — faith without certitude — proves Ratzinger is a heretic. (2) The modernist Ratzinger is condemned as a heretic by his own oath. (3) A crazy pope loses office. (4) Bp. Williamson confesses the sin of heresy (no warnings needed!) with the crime of heresy. And... a word on the SSPX “party-line” mentality. (Internet, September 2006)

The Legal Status of SSPX and Its Former Members. What type of organization is the Society of St. Pius X according to the principles of canon law? Is it really something like a religious order? Do priests who leave it become “public sinners”? Response to a commentary by SSPX seminary rector Rev. Peter Scott. (Internet, August 2006)

THUC, ABP.

Pius XII, Excommunication, and Traditional Catholic Bishops. It is erroneous to maintain that a 1951 decree and a 1958 encyclical of Pius XII excommunicating bishops in Communist China would apply to traditional Catholic bishops of our own time. Intro and texts.

TRAD CONTROVERSY

Home Alone? The article that coined the term ‘Home-Aloners’ are traditionalists who maintain all traditional chapels are illicit and evil. (Pamphlet, February 1993)

Letter to Ten-Year-Olds Who Just Want to Be Confirmed. An SSPX District Superior requires that confirmants from sign a lengthy oath against Fr. Cekada et al. (Pamphlet, March 1990)

Light on the OSJ. The Order of St. John claims it is the ‘true’ Knights of Malta, and operates chapels where the traditional Mass is offered. An examination of its dubious historical claims and ecumenical connections. (Roman Catholic, December 1981)

Bishop Mendez and the 1990 SSPV Ordinations. Conflicting accounts by participants lead to an unsettling conclusion. (Internet, September 2006)

Mt. St. Michael & CMRI: Brief Overview. Whatever this group’s past difficulties may have been, it is wrong to claim that its members were “schismatic” or “Old Catholic.” (Pamphlet, October 1993)

(January 2007)

Free Information Packet: For a free information on the traditional Latin Mass, please contact: St. Gertrude the Great Roman Catholic Church, 4900 Rialto Road, West Chester OH 45069, 513.645.4212, www.sgg.org